

FIFA World Cup 2026 Squads: Every Team's Latest Selection

Forty-eight nations. 1,248 players. One trophy. Final 26-man squads for the FIFA World Cup 2026 must be submitted to FIFA by June 1, 2026, with preliminary lists of 35 to 55 players due May 11. The tournament kicks off June 11 at Estadio Azteca with Mexico vs South Africa.

Below is the latest squad selection from each of the 48 nations heading to the United States, Canada, and Mexico this summer. These are not the final 26-man rosters yet. Until federations finalize their lists, the March 2026 international break selections (plus any preliminary announcements already filed) give the clearest picture of each manager's thinking, with injury updates noted where players have been ruled out or face fitness doubts.

We update this page after every international window. Bookmark it and check back as coaches trim their lists down to the final 26.

For the full squad timeline, read our World Cup 2026 Squad Announcement Dates guide. For the latest fitness updates on every player, see our dedicated World Cup 2026 Injury List.

FIFA World Cup 2026 Squads FAQ

When are the final World Cup 2026 squads announced?

Preliminary squads of 35 to 55 players (including five goalkeepers) are due May 11, 2026. Final 26-man squads must be submitted to FIFA by June 1, 2026, ten days before the tournament opens on June 11. Clubs must release players named in the final squads by May 25, with exceptions until May 30 for those involved in the Champions League final, Europa League final, Conference League final, or CONCACAF Champions Cup final.

How many players are in a World Cup 2026 squad?

Each team registers up to 26 players, including at least three goalkeepers. The minimum squad size is 23 players. Teams can also bring nine additional training players, taking the full traveling squad to 35.

Which teams qualified via the playoffs?

Four UEFA playoff winners (Bosnia & Herzegovina, Czechia, Sweden, Türkiye) and two intercontinental playoff winners (Iraq, DR Congo) claimed the final six spots in March 2026.

Which teams will make their World Cup debut in 2026?

Cape Verde, Curaçao, Jordan, and Uzbekistan will all play in their first-ever FIFA World Cup.

Can squads be changed after June 1?

Yes, but only for injury or illness. A player can be replaced up to 24 hours before the team's first match with joint medical approval from the team doctor and FIFA's General Medical Officer. Replacement players do not have to come from the preliminary list. Goalkeepers can be replaced at any point during the tournament.

Which star players are ruled out of World Cup 2026?

Several major players have been confirmed out, including Hugo Ekitiké (France), Rodrygo and Éder Militão (Brazil), Serge Gnabry (Germany), and Xavi Simons (Netherlands). Others, including Achraf Hakimi (Morocco) and Kylian Mbappé (France), remain doubts ahead of the June 1 deadline. For the full list with the latest fitness updates on every player, see our World Cup 2026 Injury List.

Which teams have already announced preliminary squads?

Uzbekistan was among the first to file, announcing a 40-man preliminary squad for a pre-tournament training camp on May 5, 2026. The United States has confirmed its final squad will be revealed on May 26. Most other federations are expected to file their preliminary lists on or around the May 11 deadline, with final squads following over the next three weeks.

How often is this page updated?

We update this page after every international window and as soon as each of the 48 federations announces its preliminary and final squads.

All 48 nations are now known. Preliminary squads are due May 11, the final 26-man rosters lock in on June 1, and the tournament kicks off June 11 at Estadio Azteca with Mexico vs South Africa.
